- Follow McCullough Gulch Road to the gate where you will find the parking area. Please do not block the gate.

Trail Highlights:

- Although private property exists along this trail, hikers and mountain bikers are allowed access and are asked to stay on the trail and to respect private property.
- The trail is located on the north side of Quandary Peak, elevation 14,265 feet. From the trailhead you will be hiking on an old mining road through the McCullough Gulch drainage.
- Approximately 0.7 miles from the trailhead, bear to the left to follow the trail while the road curves sharply to the right.
- The trail continues through lodgepole pine and eventually comes to a clearing that contains a large boulder field. Follow the rock cairns marking the trail through the boulder field and cross the bridge.
- After you cross the bridge, you can hear White Falls to the left of the trail.
- Approximately .0.3 miles above White Falls is a glacial lake providing a magnificent view of the entire McCullough Gulch drainage.

Important Information:

- Horses are not recommended on this trail due to the difficult terrain and the number of hikers.
